Description

Resin wall light by Pierre Disderot for Dallux 1960s
Pierre Disderot (1920-1991) was a major French designer and manufacturer of post-war modern lighting. A graduate of the École nationale supérieure des arts appliqués, he founded the Disderot house in 1950, which would become a key player in French design alongside creators such as Pierre Guariche, Joseph-André Motte, and Michel Mortier. For Dallux, Disderot designed lamps with clean, functional, and elegant lines, incorporating innovative materials such as lacquered metal, brass, and opaline diffusers. His models combine industrial rigor and formal poetry, often intended for modern interiors or institutional buildings. A Dallux lamp by Disderot is highly sought after today for its minimalist aesthetic, authenticity and rarity, and
