Description

This seal is old. It is a coat of arms surmounted by a royal crown, on top of which is a two-armed archiepiscopal cross. The crown is surmounted by a headdress forming part of the external ornaments, representing a wide-brimmed hat, generally reserved for clergymen. The seal is accompanied by a cord, the number of knots of which (tassels, also called tassels, or fiocchi) reflects the rank of the clergyman. Ecclesiastical heraldry. Patriarchs, archbishops and bishops can no longer use the insignia of family noble titles or secular dignities, but they could formerly use the external ornaments corresponding to the noble titles possibly attached to their seat or their abbey. This use was abolished in 1951 under the pontificate of Pius XII. For the condition, note two losses on the wood. Please detail the photos.
