Description

This Villeroy & Boch tea service, dating from the Saar Union period (circa 1950s-1970s), is distinguished by its elegant pattern of red flowers on a cream background, typical of the decorative style of this period. It is designed for six people, including several cups, saucers, a teapot, a sugar bowl, and a creamer. This service consists of a coffee pot, a teapot with 6 cups and saucers, a sugar bowl, and a creamer. In perfect condition

Saar Union: The term Saar Union refers to the economic union that was established by France to reorganize the region's industries, including ceramics. This period was marked by a reorganization of production and a strengthening of ties between French industries and companies in the Saarland, of which Villeroy & Boch was a part. Design and Production: During this period,

Villeroy & Boch continued to produce high-quality porcelain pieces, but the style evolved to suit the tastes of French and international customers. Decorative motifs, such as those on the tea service pictured, were often inspired by the Rococo, French Classicism, or French Country styles popular at the time.
