Description

This oil on canvas painting, signed Forest and dated 1930s, depicts a vibrant scene of rural life by the sea, most likely in Brittany. The painting shows several figures in traditional Breton costume (men in hats and women in aprons) gathered near a small hut or boat on a rocky, sunlit shore. The background features a vast, choppy sea under a dramatic, cloudy sky. The style is characteristic of the Breton regionalist school of the early 20th century, with its use of bold, expressive brushwork and a focus on the local environment and way of life. The figures are shown in various activities, possibly related to fishing or preparing food. The overall composition is dynamic, with the figures and the sea interacting in a sense of movement and energy. The painting is a fine example of Art Deco-influenced regionalist art.
