Description

Pair Of Indonesian carved female sculptures late 18th century depicting two standing women in carved and lacquered wood with extensive painting losses. Resting on an oval base, both antique oriental art figures are made of a single piece of wood with the joint of arms and forearms, one right forearms is not original, has been replaced. Both have a worn cotton bodice edged with trimmings. The hair is lacquered and gathered at the back. The arms stretched forward appear to be holding out something on offer. Holes on the ears suggest a previous presence of earrings. Traces of blue on the legs, greenish gray on the body, the palms of the hands dyed red, black in the outline of the eyes these are the remaining polychromes. The fascinating finish, craquelure and oxidation of the pigments suggest
