Description

Folding Chairs by Russel Wright for Samsonite Chairs 1960s In the 1950s, American designer Russel Wright collaborated with Shwayder Brothers Inc., makers of the Samsonite brand, to create a line of innovative folding chairs. These chairs, designed for schools and outdoor spaces, are distinguished by their enameled steel frames and molded plywood seats, combining strength with a modern aesthetic. Their clean, functional design reflects Wright's commitment to making modern design accessible to the general public. These pieces are now prized by collectors and exhibited in institutions such as the Brooklyn Museum and the Cooper Hewitt Smithsonian Design Museum. They embody the spirit of mid-20th-century American industrial design. Discover all our other products on our website:
