painted, with a light brush, expert in small, vivid bursts on skillfully distributed grays or ochres, the humble and picturesque events, the portraits of its austere society with its monotonous and hushed existence. But Jules René Hervé knows just as well how to restore the lively atmosphere of Parisian life and its monuments or the dancers in the foyer of the Opera - From his finely observed compositions emanate delicate feelings. Appreciated by French and foreign amateurs, Jules René Hervé devoted himself to his art throughout his life - Jules René Hervé is considered "the last of the impressionists"
