Description

- Zoomorphic patinated bronze tap, work dating from the beginning of the 20th century. - The appearance of this tap, in patinated bronze, surprises as much as it seduces. If the spout comes from a bull protome, it is the face sculpted in bas-relief of a gorgon which serves as a handle to operate this tap. These zoomorphic and anthropomorphic elements are delicately transcribed, in a naturalist style, the presence of these figures is reinforced. The refined aesthetic of this work tends to make us forget its utilitarian function, and this for the greatest pleasure of the eyes. - Very good condition. - Dimensions - Height: 17 cm, Width: 8 cm, Depth: 18.5 cm, External diameter of the thread: 4.5 cm
