Description

A matched pair of Wedgwood lustre three-handled Loving Mugs, designed by Daisy Makeig-Jones circa 1915. The first mug corresponds to Decoration Book pattern Z4827: Ruby Lustre exterior with butterflies and oriental motifs, and a Mother-of-Pearl Lustre interior with a butterfly at the centre. The base is stamped Wedgwood with pattern number. The second mug has a green lustre exterior with two panels -- a coiled gilt snake on one side and a dancing dragon on the reverse. The interior, in green-toned Mother-of-Pearl Lustre, features a central medallion of the coiled snake enclosing a small monkey. The base has a factory stamp; the pattern number is worn with age.

Both mugs have three loop handles with a central gilt line and gilt rims. These are rare surviving examples of Makeig-Jones lustreware, notable for their preservation and unusual pairing of color schemes.

It's

worth noting the unique shape of these handmade miniature cups, and one might assume their production was limited. Most likely, they were primarily intended for children, and acquiring such a marvelous little cup would have been a delightful gift.

Size: Height 5 cm, width 8 cm, depth 8 cm
