Description

Sarcophagus mask - Egypt, Late Period (around 600 to 300 BC) Small carved wooden sarcophagus mask, presenting a face with schematic features. The almond-shaped eyes are set off by a marked relief, without incised pupils. The nose is straight, slightly prominent, and the small, closed mouth is discreetly indicated by a slight modeling. The woodwork reveals tool marks and a surface that is now patinated, with very tenuous remains of polychromy in certain areas, notably around the eyes. The bottom of the mask is flared to allow its insertion into a support or a sarcophagus element. The longitudinal cracks and losses reveal the aging of the material and the mechanical stresses undergone over time. The object is mounted on a modern black wooden base, not antique, intended for presentation. Total
