pattern. Shapes and designs have traveled extensively throughout distant Central Asia. Pattern repeated consistently across the field by six large, very elaborate medallions. They bring great elegance and heraldic character to this piece. In doing so, the borders are generally the same color as the field. This is part of the nomadic lifestyle of moving away from ostentatious forms. # # Usually the tribe had its "gul" probably as a rallying crest. The soft, shiny wool is densely knotted and very fine, the pile is flush and this rug has a beautiful patina. Turkmen handcrafted rugs are very well made. In other regions, nomadic rugs are often loosely knotted and have long pile, unlike Afghan or Turkmen rugs which have tight knots (Persian knot) velvet features and goat hair or sheep wool, supple and shiny. The use of goat hair and camels is more common for the warp and weft. These rugs have a masculine aura. They have always been appreciated since the 19th century for the decoration of businessmen's offices. These majestic rugs are certainly the best in Central Asia and are the work of the Turkmen tribes. The same spirit of knotting and pattern is found in neighboring rugs from Turkmenistan but also in Afghanistan. These rugs remain with the Caucasus the hardest to differentiate, so many are the patterns and specific to the clans of all Central Asia.
