Description

This original oil on canvas from the first half of the 20th century presents a quiet Scandinavian winter landscape. A winter road winds between open fields and dense forest wrapped in a white snowy coat, turning toward a small village hamlet visible in the distance. Spruces and birches cast ghostly shadows on the snowy white blanket. The clear sky carries the gentle color of a winter sunset, and a fine frosty haze settles over the trees, softening the far horizon and giving the scene calm depth. This work represents an excellent example of winter genre painting from the first half of the 20th century, combining the artist's technical mastery and the expressive mood of the cold season. Unfortunately, we were not able to decipher the artist's signature at the bottom left, but this does not diminish the artistic
