used above all in Khorassan and Ferahan, design meaning fish in Persian and corresponding to the Herati pattern.- The wool of the Khorassan is fine silky and delicate.- Our Kain model presents a palette of typical shades, clear, almost faded, orange and pistachio green dominate associated with other colors.- The medallion having some resemblances with the Kashan type, shows us two small pendants in terminations and is found in colors and designs in the spandrels;- The flowery and delicate border is adorned with the same shades as the pistachio field covered with a Herati decoration also called Mahi. There are three types of Khorassan /- the classic, our model,-- A type with a plain field or can occasionally present multiple medallions;- The rarest Khorassan, with animals, lions, tigers, antelopes and deer, in hunting decoration. These pieces knotted for centuries (16th century for the oldest) are located in the Northeast of Persia, Iran whose capital is Meshed (Macchad), a border region of Afghanistan and Baluchistan.# Our model is in very good condition and is of course more intended to adorn a wall. Khorasan ((in Persian: ??????) etym. pers. "where the sun comes from") is a region located in the northeast of Iran. Eastern part of the Sassanid Empire, Khorassan is considered by Afghans as the medieval name of Afghanistan since it extended from the Northeast of Persia (present-day Iran) throughout the territory of present-day Afghanistan and included the south of Turkmenistan, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan to the Oxus River (The Amu Darya). In addition to Khorassan carpets, Persian, it is not uncommon to find carpets, Afghan, Baluchis, Turkmens, these ethnic groups have lived there for centuries. Khorasan is renowned for its famous carpets and the cultivation of saffron in the south of the province.
