wool pile of this carpet is thick and shiny, It is on the Anatolians that we find an innovation, the medallion, that the Turks borrowed from Persian knotters. The medallion appeared in the sixteenth century on these Anatolian carpets, in fact the Ottoman Empire occupied Persia during this period, and exchanges were numerous. These carpets are "close" to a type of carpet painted by a Venetian painter, Lorenzo Lotto (1480 - 1557) and a German painter Hans Holbein (1497 - 1543). These are the Turkish carpets that were placed on tables, balconies and hung on the walls at that time. Turkish carpets (Hereké, Kayseri) were exported to the great European hotels during the 19th century, in fact, these carpets enjoyed a great reputation and were considered much better than Persian carpets and it was only towards the end of the 19th century that Western merchants raised the price of Persian.Our village model has remarkable nuances and is in good condition considering its age, the bright red field and its very ornate and colorful border, beautifully brings out the other nuances.The richness of the border makes it a true work of art, each decorative element representing a tribal symbolism deeply linked to the history and origin of these carpets but also of these populations, making each carpet a unique piece.In summary, this carpet is a precise example of this type, rich in color and in good condition for its age.This carpet has been cleaned in a professional and ecological way.Dimensions: Width: 107cm (42") x Length: 160 cm (63")FREE SHIPPING FOR FRANCE as for all of our carpets!!!
