great art theorist) for four years from 1954 to 1958. The father Adrien's son took a dim view of his son's artistic career. The latter then asked André Lhote to write him a letter that might reassure him. This was done on April 21, 1956, when André Lhote wrote to Adrien's father a letter in which we can read: "Your son asks me to share with you the opinion I have of him. I do so all the more willingly because this opinion is excellent. Your son possesses a high degree of the gift of painting... You can count on my devotion to help him, because, once again, your son possesses a true painter's temperament, which is quite rare." André Lhote taught Adrien, in particular, how to organize his paintings and control his instincts.
