Description

Vintage albumen print, titled in ink at the bottom. House on rue Saint-André-des-arts, c.1900, This is the home of the historian André Duchesne (1584-1640), French geographer and historiographer, father of modern history. Rue Saint-André-des-Arts is an emblematic street in the 6th arrondissement of Paris, located in the heart of the Latin Quarter and Saint-Germain-des-Prés. This street, whose history dates back to Roman times, owes its name to the former church of Saint-André-des-Arts, built in the 13th century. It has undergone many transformations, particularly in the 1870s, and has housed famous figures such as Baudelaire and Nadar. Eugène Atget (1857-1927) is a French photographer famous for having documented old Paris before its transformation. For over thirty
