Period : 19th century

Condition : Bon état

Description

This dress bodice, also known as a boned caraco, is made of off-white silk satin. In the fashion of 1880, it hugs the figure thanks to its fitted cut and boned structure, which give it support and elegance. The front fastens with buttons, while the long, close-fitting sleeves end in cuffs adorned with a tall flounce of stitched pleats. Unlined, it reveals the finesse of its construction. There are slight signs of wear and discreet stains, but it remains in overall good condition.
