Miniature Collector's Cabinet, early 18th century, probably English. This finely crafted miniature cabinet from the first quarter of the eighteenth century is veneered in beautifully figured burl walnut. The façade opens with two doors revealing an intricate arrangement of small drawers surrounding a central cupboard compartment, all fitted with brass ring pulls. The front and sides are veneered, while the top and top of the door panels are decorated with faux burl walnut graining. Subtle inlaid decoration can be found on the front of the doors, the sides and on the inner door panels, adding a refined decorative touch to the cabinet's restrained design. Cabinets of this type were intended to house jewellery, documents, curiosities and other personal treasures, combining practical storage
