simple, we can see on the back the two loops forming the knot which makes them very resistant. The great characteristic of these rugs, quite rare on the market, is this large medallion with very sophisticated plumes that they display in the center of their field. Our model is adorned with this floral medallion, placed on an almost salmon pink field, set by four spandrels abundantly flowered in blue, of the most beautiful effect, surrounded by a decoration of stylized branches. Note the two pendants accompanied by plumes.## The salmon pink shade called "dughi", was obtained by adding yogurt, called "dugh" to the other natural dyes of these old carpets in the 19th century. Subsequently, the crafts of Arak used a characteristic process to obtain the background pink (also called "doughi pink or milky pink). This color is obtained by immersing the wool mixed with alum, in a serous solution based on madder. After two days, the wool is immersed for 24 hours in running water, which gives it this specific tone with almost bluish reflections. A striking contrast, a mixture of wool with a little silk, shiny and fine. The borders have a superb golden shine or stylized flowers are placed in a row spaced by flowering branches. A very slight wear covers the whole of this superb carpet, magnificent to look at. We present other Tafresh from the 19th and 20th centuries, breathtakingly beautiful, on our Proantic gallery.
