multiple facets of decorative art. He illustrated nearly eighty books, including several large-format books of remarkable print quality at Devambez. Between 1912 and 1925, he worked for the famous fashion magazine La Gazette du Bon Ton. Remaining attached to Parisian life and its artistic milieu, he joined the Cercle des Mortigny, founded in 1908 by Dimitri d'Osnobichine and bringing together numerous artists, many of whom drew alongside Arnoux at La Gazette, such as Boutet de Monvel, Brissaud, and even the couturier Paul Poiret. Guy Arnoux is the representative of a new popular art, both modern and traditional. He is undoubtedly the last great French picture book, his last great illustrated book: "Les temps ne sont plus ... Souvenirs de vingt-cinq années de vénerie" (The Times Are No More ... Souvenirs of Twenty-Five Years of Hunting), sounds like a sort of testament after colorful years exploring the past and the present in harmony with his eternal values.
