Description

This charming little painting, probably executed in the late 18th or early 19th century, is a watercolor and ink on paper depicting a bucolic scene imbued with gentleness and tranquility. A peasant, wearing a wide straw hat, is depicted dozing against a tree, his legs stretched out, in a resting posture after what appears to be a long day of walking or work. At his side, his donkey, peaceful and solidly harnessed, waits obediently, tied to a rope. The subtly balanced composition places the animal at the center of the scene, in an almost benevolent attitude, as if watching over its sleeping master. The background sketches a picturesque rural landscape, enlivened by a clear sky where a few birds fly, reinforcing the feeling of calm and lightness. The precise drawing demonstrates an attention to detail characteristic
