Description

The day has risen, the sun colors the sky and the old oaks let through a diaphanous light, a large-leaved thistle enhances with its subtly illuminated color the dark part of the painting where the spectator can admire many details: butterflies, a small daisy, the details of the leaves of the thistles. A dog located in the foreground, guardian of this pastoral tranquility, watches us from the corner of his eye. Jan Van der Meer was very famous for his drawings and paintings of animals (source Bénézit) was born in Haarlem, the Netherlands in 1656, a pupil of his father Jan van der Meer nicknamed (VerMeer of Haarlem) after a stay in Italy he settled in his hometown, opened a workshop where he trained many students in animal painting, his animal work has been compared with another native of Haarlem
