Description

I present to you an oil on panel by Eugène Galien-Laloue, a renowned French artist, born in 1854 and died in 1941. This captivating work depicts a countryside scene, where the softness of the landscapes and the elegance of the buildings blend into a serene atmosphere. Galien-Laloue, known for his talent in capturing light and atmosphere, often used pseudonyms to sign some of his works. This allowed him to avoid contractual constraints imposed by his dealers or to respond to specific commercial strategies. This piece is signed A. Languinais, one of the many names he adopted throughout his career. Other pseudonyms used by Galien-Laloue include Léon Dupuy, Eugène Dupuy, Juliany, Eugène Galiany, Jacques Liévin, Eugène Lemaitre, Maurice Lenoir, and Dumoutier. Each of these names reflects a facet of his work and artistic approach, adding a mysterious dimension to his legacy. The work is beautifully showcased in a wood and stucco frame, which is in good condition. The panel measures 41 x 27 cm, while the frame measures 58.5 x 44.5 cm. This frame, with its ornate details, adds an extra touch of elegance to this already remarkable piece. This oil on panel is a true invitation to contemplation, although there are some repaints, ideal for enriching an art collection or for bringing a touch of refinement to an interior. Its authenticity, history, and beauty make it a valuable acquisition for any art lover. Don't miss the opportunity to add this unique work to your artistic heritage.
