Description

An important and rare Regency period fireplace in black stone from Saint Cyr au Mont d'Or (Rhône), with a sculpted decoration of putti emerging from the bath, one wiping the feet of the second holding a wreath of flowers with his loincloth. Its slightly curved lintel, with its ends adorned with a conch shell from which foliage emerges, rests on projecting, very slightly curved sheathed jambs. A torus runs along its hearth line. The lintel returns were recut by our workshop, from the same stone, respecting the quality of the object. A discreetly restored floor slab is available. Stone from Saint Cyr au Mont d'Or (Rhône): With shades varying from gray to black (the most popular) or ochre with a purple vein, the particularity of this stone is the inclusion of gryphea, a mother-of-pearl color (a mollusk close
