Description

Elegant white porcelain service consisting of a teapot, a milk jug, a sugar bowl open on a saucer and seven cups with handles with their saucers. The forms are simple and sleek, typical of the style of the 60s. Brand 'VIREBENT/MODEL MOHY' under each piece. Yves Mohy (1928-2004) is a French ceramist also trained in architecture. Established initially in the village of La Borne, a mecca of ceramics since the 12th century, he produces bowls, cups, vases and stoneware pitchers. Thanks to an article dedicated to him by the Revue des Arts Ménagers, Mohy gained notoriety and exhibited in several galleries during the 60s. It was also at this time that he collaborated with Virebent, a famous porcelain manufacturer, for whom he created prototypes. Subsequently, he taught at the Beaux-Arts in
