Description

Unsigned work, executed in the mid-20th century, some paint loss on the edge of the canvas. Shipping or delivery possible, please contact us. This painting represents a musical family scene dating from 1780-1781, created by the Austrian painter Johann Nepomuk della Croce. The work depicts a family in 18th-century period dress, with a young man at the harpsichord, accompanied by other figures, one of whom is holding a violin, and a framed portrait in the background. This work is particularly prized by art collectors and classical music lovers for its representation of the cultural atmosphere of the time and its historical importance. Lovers of 18th-century art and museum institutions are interested in this type of painting for its documentary value on family musical practices
