Description

Description: Oil on canvas with a palette dominated by greens, earthy browns, and a white or grayish sky. The composition is defined by a row of thick, dark tree trunks that cut horizontally across the center, with a small body of water in the foreground. Two small human figures are seated under the shade of a tree. The treatment is realistic and atmospheric, with brushwork that lingers on the details of the leaves and grass in the foreground, becoming softer and more diffuse in the treetops and sky. The artistic approach aligns with landscape realism or naturalism, showing influences from the Barbizon School. This style emphasizes the faithful representation of nature and rural atmosphere. Although the Barbizon style was dominant in the mid-19th century, its influence and the atmospheric realism
