Description

Men's watch models in the 1930s definitively freed themselves from the traditional round shape to play on a geometric style. This one from the Omega brand, famous for its quality, thanks to its shapes that follow the wrist, and its ribs that run along the case respect the aesthetic codes in force in the 1930s. The case is signed, like the movement, and it is made of 40 micron gold plate (in excellent condition). The range was then available in different materials, but the case is here fully plated, a sign of quality. It works perfectly. It can of course be worn advantageously today by a woman, because we no longer make tiny watches for them as at the time.
