A student of Eugène Claude at the Académie des Beaux-Arts, he specialized in the representation of atmospheric and luminous landscapes, often inspired by the banks of the Seine, notably in Asnières-sur-Seine where he resided. His works are distinguished by a muted palette and a serene atmosphere, mixing realism and poetry. Jacob exhibited regularly at the Paris Salon from 1899 and became a member of the Society of French Artists. His style, marked by a delicate touch and a search for light, earned him international recognition, particularly after the
