Knight of the Order of Arts and Letters. After the war, back in Bornes les Mimosas, his meeting with Georges Gouzy opened a new perspective on ceramic art and painting. Subsequently, Robert took over the ceramist's workshop. In 1967, in Bornes les Mimosas (Place du Poulid-Cantoun), Robert Chiazzo and his wife opened a shop under the name 'la Cueva' to sell the ceramic production of renowned ceramists such as Michel Anasse, Albert Thiry, Olivier Pettit, Roger Collet, Jacques Pouchain, Jean-Claude Malarmey, Robert Perot (atelier le Vieux Moulin), Jacques Lignier ... .

With these artists, he trained himself in ceramics. His work was selected for the International Biennial of Ceramic Art in Vallauris (1978, 1980 and 1982). His pieces are exhibited in France, Germany, Italy, Belgium and even in Canada and the United States. Robert's ceramic production is decorative and utilitarian, with vases, pitchers, mirrors, lamp bases, candlesticks, and a few objects related to sacred art. His ceramic style is influenced by the pieces of the artists represented in his gallery, such as the owls of Michel Anasse or Jacques Pouchain, and the religious and animal sculptures of Olivier Pettit. Upon the latter's death in 1979, Mrs. Pettit gave some of her husband's molds to Robert, who then co-signed the production (OP + Chiazzo). On a more personal level, Robert Chiazzo created pieces glazed in 'copper red' of very high quality, some of which have been included in the Modern Collection of the Royal Museums of Art and History in Brussels. To obtain the copper red luster, Robert fueled his kiln with thyme and herbs. The 'La Cueva' shop operated until 1987. From that date, Robert abandoned clay to take up his brushes and easel. His encounter with Suzanne Frémont (1876-1962) influenced his work as a figurative painter until 2007, although he was interested in the abstract style of Nicolas de Staël (1914-1955), whom he encountered in Le Lavandou. It was the work of painters Georges Henri Pescadère (1915-2003) and Alain Ruby (1943-), which led Robert to approach the abstract movement, showcasing colors and their luminosity. He then used pure colors as 'they come out of the tube.'

Robert Chiazzo created more than 300 figurative and abstract paintings, some of which were exhibited at the Arts and History Museum in May 2010 in Bormes les Mimosas.
