Description

Vintage albumen print circa 1900. Fountain of Mars, also known as the Gros Caillou Fountain, rue Saint-Dominique in Paris. Eugène Atget (1857-1927) was a French photographer famous for documenting old Paris before its transformation. For over thirty years, he captured streets, buildings, and scenes of daily life with a gaze that was both documentary and poetic. His work influenced the Surrealists and generations of photographers. Recognized primarily after his death, he is now considered a pioneer of modern photography. The Fountain of Mars, or Gros Caillou Fountain, is a neoclassical monument in the 7th arrondissement of Paris (129 rue Saint-Dominique). Designed by François-Jean Bralle and decorated by Pierre-Nicolas Beauvallet during the Napoleonic era, it is distinguished by
