Description

A magnificent and authentic hand-blown glass pocket flask, dating from the 18th or early 19th century, made in Northwest Europe, probably in the Netherlands or England, between approximately 1780 and 1820. This small olive green, hand-blown bottle has a clearly visible pontil mark on the bottom and an applied and worked neck - a typical feature of pre-industrial glass production. Its charming, irregular shape and rich olive hue give it a unique character and undeniable historical appeal. These compact flasks were commonly used for spirits such as gin, brandy, or rum, and slipped easily into a pocket or satchel. Details: Date: circa 1780-1820
Origin: Netherlands or England Material: Hand-blown glass Color: Olive green Height: approx. 14.5 cm Width: approx. 9.5 cm
