Description

This charming oil painting on panel depicts an oak tree in its lovely giltwood frame with a carmine velvet border. It portrays a peaceful landscape with large, leafy branches, along a muddy, rutted path where a leaning, whitewashed marker indicates the crossing of a stream from the Grand Canal, bathed in autumnal light. A woman in a headscarf leads a young child by the hand, delighted by the walk, arms raised in a simple and expansive setting of sparse trees. In the distance, a line of trees closes off the flat landscape beneath an opaque sky. A beautiful and serene atmosphere pervades this work by a painter of the Barbison school, where classicism (details and colors) blends with impressionism (light and subject). A beautifully proportioned and decorative painting, inspired and in very good
