Description

A beautiful and luminous oil on copper in the Mannerist style, depicting the martyrdom of Saint Lawrence. A southern work from the mid-18th century. An interesting composition centers around the pyre where Saint Lawrence was tied to the gridiron intended for his martyrdom. The two figures appearing as executioners are reminiscent of certain figures often found around the scene of the Flagellation of Christ, particularly in the Mannerist school. This martyrdom scene is richly animated with figures on several planes, against an architectural background featuring a temple and fortifications. The colors have remained fresh, and even if there is a certain naiveté in the execution, this oil on copper presents a martyrdom scene of undeniable charm. There are a few small, old restorations. A protective matte
