Description

DescriptionThis original pen and ink drawing from 1961 presents a captivating surreal architectural landscape that merges geometric precision with imaginative abstraction. The artist constructs a complex cityscape of interwoven buildings, stairways, and textured grids, balanced against the minimal outline of a human form. The interplay between densely rendered detail and vast open space creates a dynamic visual rhythm, suggesting both structure and dreamlike suspension. Executed in fine black ink on aged paper, the composition demonstrates exceptional control of line, cross-hatching, and perspective, recalling the analytical approach of architectural draftsmen while evoking the poetic ambiguity of surrealism. The monochrome palette and meticulous technique give the piece an enduring
