Description

DescriptionThis striking abstract oil on canvas, labelled on the reverse "Roland Alexander 1962," exemplifies the expressive materiality of early 1960s Art Informel. The surface is built up with thick, tactile impasto--deep greens, umber, crimson, and cobalt intertwine in a vigorous composition of gestural brushwork and layered pigment. Flecks of ochre and white emerge through darker passages, suggesting fleeting structure within an otherwise turbulent field. The painting's dense texture and chromatic tension evoke a post-war sensibility of introspection and renewal, balancing chaos and order through rhythm and color. Executed with great physicality, the work reflects the European movement toward abstraction that emphasized the autonomy of the painted surface and the
