Description

Oil on mahogany panel depicting a coastal landscape of southern France or Corsica, with fishermen returning home among the rocks. The painting's main interest lies in its yellow-orange hue, which captures the light so typical of southern France at the end of the day, at sunset. Painted around 1920, this painting is unsigned but is likely the work of a poster and illustration artist such as Adelin Charles Morel de Tanguy (1857-1930) or Roger Broders (1883-1953). Attributing the work to a specific artist should be easy for anyone familiar with southern painting; indeed, the style is distinctive, and the light touch, as well as the effect of paint combined with pencil in the outlines, is characteristic of a well-known artist. The frame is recent, and the panel measures approximately 27cm x 19cm.
