Saint-Dizier Museum. At the 1889 Paris Universal Exposition, he received a bronze medal, and then in 1890, at the Salon des Artistes Français, a third-class medal. Also in 1890, his marble statue, "La Nuit Pleine" (Full Night), was acquired by the State and placed in the Palais du Sénat (Senate Palace). In 1895, he received a bronze medal for his marble Eve, now in the Musée du Luxembourg. The following year, he won a second-class medal at the Brussels International Exposition and then a silver medal at the 1900 Universal Exposition. He is responsible for Greuze's tomb in the Montmartre Cemetery. He married Moreau-Vauthier's daughter in 1885. His work is highly valued on ArtPrice.
