Description

A charming bronze sculpture depicting the young Joan of Arc listening to voices. The model is attributed to Michel Léonard Béguine (1855-1929), an artist active in the late 19th century, known for his historical and allegorical subjects. The piece has a beautiful, perfectly even brown patina. Béguine's signature is on the base. There is no foundry mark, as is often the case for this type of decorative casting from the period. An expressive sculpture, full of movement and sensitivity, in the naturalistic style of the turn of the century.
