Description

Veiled Virgin in a Medallion Carved alabaster with halo Antique work (at least 19th century, possibly earlier) Alabaster medallion depicting a veiled Virgin in right profile, recognizable by her simple veil, her slightly raised halo, and the restrained gentleness of her features. It is a devotional image, similar to Mater Dolorosa types, without definitively establishing a direct identification. A notable feature: the medallion and the pedestal are carved from the same stone, with perfect continuity of material and patina. This indicates simultaneous creation, characteristic of an early ensemble rather than a later addition. This type of turned alabaster pedestal is typical of pre-19th-century production, which justifies a cautious dating: at least 19th century, but very likely earlier. The reverse of the medallion, carefully smoothed, bears an old perforation. The surface displays a matte, even, and homogeneous patina throughout--including the reworked areas of the base--evidence of age and previous handling. Condition: Good overall condition. Signs of wear consistent with age, minor surface scratches, slight alterations to the edge of the medallion, and a small old repair at the base. Stable surface. Beautiful patina.
