Description

Pears picked from the garden and placed in a copper dish on a table. A gourmand has already eaten half one. This is not a painting but a chromolithograph, more simply called a "chromo." This process dates from the early 19th century and was practiced until the 1950s. It looks remarkably like a painting! It is very decorative and quite durable. It is printed on cardboard and framed in black. With frame: 44 x 33 cm // Without frame: 37 x 26 cm
