Japanese Bizen Pitcher

330 EUR

Period : 20th century

Condition : Très bon état

Description

This early 20th-century ceramic pitcher has a slender shape with a narrow neck that flares slightly towards the opening.The body is rounded and features an intentionally pronounced side groove, designed to provide a better grip.The surface displays a brown to blackish hue, with natural variations resulting from the wood-fired kiln. This deep color is achieved through firing in a low-oxygen atmosphere.The texture remains slightly irregular, characteristic of the artisanal shaping typical of Bizen pottery, near Okayama, in southern Japan. The high-temperature firing vitrifies the silicate components of the clay, resulting in a natural glaze typical of these objects, without any added enamel.The overall impression is of a traditional utilitarian piece, faithful to the Bizen techniques of the first half of
