Description

Oil on canvas, signed lower right, by Jean-Pierre Stauffer (1927-1994), depicting the banks of the Aygues River (or Eygues, a river in southeastern France flowing through the departments of Drôme, Hautes-Alpes, and Vaucluse. It is a tributary of the Rhône) at Orange (nicknamed the "City of Princes," Orange is a French commune located in the northwest of the Vaucluse department in the Provence-Alpes-Côte d'Azur region). Image size: 27 x 19 cm. Jean-Pierre Stauffer was born in 1927 and died in 1994. He was a painter of the Swiss school. He studied in Lausanne and apprenticed as a graphic lithographer in La Chaux-de-Fonds, the city where he studied at the School of Fine Arts. A talented graphic designer, he worked until 1970, when he decided to devote himself entirely to painting. He left Switzerland to settle in the Orange region of Provence in 1972. He married a Provençal woman, Anne-Marie. He remained there until 1981, the year he returned to Switzerland. He then resided in his house in La Sarraz, called Les Dailles, which provided a beautiful setting for his paintings, showcased in this restored old farmhouse, filled with furniture patinated by time. During his time in France, he exhibited at 13 rue du Mont Cenis, and the Roussard Gallery organized an exhibition for him almost every year. His painting is calm and serene; he favors horizontal lines, and his palette is limited, primarily composed of ochres and muted tones. His landscapes are rarely inhabited, and details are relegated to the background, the foreground being occupied by broad swathes of color in shades of the same color, without significant variations, but with contrasts. In 1985, solo exhibition at the A. Roussard Gallery in New York (57 E 57th Street). Also exhibited at Valloton in Lausanne.
