Description

Carpet making began in Pakistan in much the same way as in India.When Pakistan seceded from India, many carpet weavers migrated to Pakistan. Most of them found work in Lahore and Karachi at a time when carpet production was receiving government support in the form of imported, high-quality yarn.Today, Pakistani carpets are made with Australian wool, giving them a very similar appearance to silk carpets. Their high knot density provides these carpets with great durability at a lower price than their Persian counterparts.The silky wool used is very soft, lustrous, and gives the carpets a lightness that makes them suitable for hanging on walls.The details are so extraordinarily fine and intricate, so shimmering in the daylight, that they appear almost alive.
