Description

This painting, signed Léon Galand and dated 1930, depicts a reclining female nude, engrossed in reading. The composition, remarkably understated, highlights the softness of the forms and the delicate light, which caresses the model's skin and subtly blends into a bluish-grey background. The artist achieves a refined balance between intimacy and serenity, capturing a moment of calm and contemplation. The supple and precise brushwork reflects a classical mastery inherited from the French academic tradition, while the limited palette lends the whole a hushed and elegant atmosphere. A work that is both modest and sensual, typical of the refined taste of the interwar period.
