Description

Pair of SNOW GLASSES called Igauguet Inupiat or Yupik culture, Alaska First half of the 20th century Wood H: 5.5; L: 18 cm Pair of wooden snow goggles carved from a single piece of wood to fit the shape of the face, with a short visor above two horizontal slits for vision and double holes on the sides to attach a carrying strap. These glasses, characteristic of the Far North, were used to reduce the intensity of the sun's rays and protect the retina from glare and reflections on snow and ice.
