Description

A set of four chairs by Japanese designer Isamu Kenmochi, circa 1970. Made of solid beech, these chairs feature a dark varnished finish that highlights the quality of the wood and the clean lines. The backrest consists of five slightly curved vertical supports, and the seat is upholstered in brown vinyl, originally stretched, in a simple and functional style. This model embodies the understated elegance of 1960s Japanese furniture, driven by the approach of Isamu Kenmochi, a key figure in modern Japanese design. His work, at the crossroads of Western rationalism and Japanese tradition, remains a benchmark. Manufactured by Akita Mokko.
