intensive study of pewterware... A museum piece! This type is found in centers of eastern Brittany such as Saint-Malo, Rennes, etc., and is similar to the Lower Normandy production of type I, known as "shouldered" tin, although the body of Breton jugs is slightly truncated conical and wider. Ownership mark engraved on the handle: CI / CHA / CI / ROYER. Paradoxically, while Brittany had tin mines, the tin industry was very limited in its eastern part and virtually nonexistent in the rest of the region.
