Description

A large Louis XV style gilt bronze cartel clock from the second third of the 19th century. The main body rests on a plinth echoing the principal motifs. In the center of the cabinet, beneath the dial, is a trophy adorned with a musical score, a lute, and a wind instrument. On the sides are floral motifs and pierced grilles draped with fabric. At the top of the composition is a putto with a lyre. This piece is comparable to the work of the renowned bronze-smiths Raingo Frères. The gilding is exquisite, with pronounced matte and burnished effects. The enamel dial features Roman numerals for the hours, Arabic numerals every five minutes, and a railway track for the minutes. The hands are Breguet-type steel. The clock is a round Parisian movement with a striking bell on the half-hours and snailed hands.
