Description

An early 19th-century oil on canvas depicting a charming interior scene: The Music Lesson, after the work painted in 1535 by Tiziano Vecellio (1488-1576), known as Titian, a major painter of the Venetian school. The painting shows a group of people attending a music lesson. The young woman on the left appears captivated by the music she hears; the man dressed in black is likely the teacher, giving instructions. The instrumentalist is dressed in red, while the singer sits holding the score. The light, coming from the window, draws our attention to the faces and to the teacher's hand with its pointing finger. The interplay of light and shadow creates an intimate atmosphere. A very fine work, with beautifully rendered drapery and expressive faces. The settings, costumes, and headdresses are
